INTRODUCTION.

Hard by the public road leading between Duns and Coldstream, at a sudden bend in its windings, and about four miles from the River Tweed, there is a ruin which marks an ancient place of worship. Along that same road leading from Duns, in the autumn of 1699, there came one Saturday a young man whose heart was palpitating with much anxiety as to the outcome of tomorrow's sermon and service. He was Mr. Thomas Boston, A.M., probationer of the Church of Scotland, and he was to preach for the parish of Simprin. He discharged the work, returned by the same road to Duns, and anxiously awaited the result. Much to his own surprise, and not altogether to his secret likings, the parish fell to him, and the Ordination took place on 21st September, 1699. Mr. Boston was then in his twenty-fourth year. The church where he preached that September Sunday, all but two hundred years ago, is to-day in ruins. It is little better than a foundation and a gable. A clump of trees rises in a straggled way out from among the graves lying around the little church. Their roots, interwoven, maintain a tight grip over the dust of many a Simprin generation. A score or more of tombstones, during the silent flight of these long years, have made an effort to remain erect. Some have partially succeeded; but many, yielding to the persuasive touch of Time, have fallen flat — hidden by the long rank grass in summer, and appearing again in dreary winter when the grass is withered.

The little children from the farm-cottages — only a few paces off — play at hide-and-seek in this little God's acre, and every semblance of eeriness seemingly has vanished from their young hearts — perhaps because the snowdrops peep out with friendly faces in early spring to reassure them, and also because they have never, with wondering eyes, seen a funeral to the little churchyard of Simprin.

A melancholy kind of place this Simprin, but in certain lights and in certain moods of the devout visitor's mind, bathed in a beauty and glory not altogether due to what is merely seen and temporal.

Here in this little church there preached and laboured a man whom the devout in Scotland cannot surely ever forget. He had a gift, which he sedulously cultivated, hiding it under no bushel, and which in the mercy of God did more to fan the flame of true piety in Scotland than that of any other single minister in his generation. Here in this tiny edifice — and a hasty glance at its modest proportions convinces you it must indeed have been very small — the young minister held forth with almost apostolic fervour, preaching, expounding, lecturing, and praying with and for these Simprin ploughmen and their families. He was intensely earnest — earnest, with that fiery fervour that lifts the poorest sermon above criticism, the kind of zeal that makes us fear there is too little of it left among us since he died. He preached as if the angels were looking in on him and his little country congregation, and as if he actually expected to be carried home by them before another sermon day came round. He laboured on manfully in this place for seven years and eight months, trying to help them by making them all, old and young, learn their Bibles, the Catechism, and the corruption of their own hearts. The young minister strove his very best to keep those rough-mannered men of the Merse from going from bad to worse: and, if ever there faithfully served a model minister in kirk or parish in Scotland, it was young Mr. Boston.

This Soliloquy was written when Mr. Boston was barely twenty-three years of age, and before Simprin and he had any favourable thoughts of each other. It is manifestly the work of a man who takes a very serious view of the office of the ministry. It is distinctly a great picture of the man of God, painted after the greatest of all masters. The young probationer — for he was not ordained when he wrote it — had a message to deliver, and here he tells himself how he ought to deliver it. In all probability it was never intended to be seen of other eyes than his own. But it is so much to the point, and so true for evermore, that it ought to be better known. In this belief we bring it to the light again, in the hope that its days of usefulness are not run because its gifted author is done with it.

The aims, character, labours, and rewards of a faithful ministry are here set forth explicitly and quaintly: and it is well that in these velvet-shod days thoughtful people should read again this young probationer's address. After licence, and before he wrote it, he wandered up and down, looking for a parish where he might be allowed to stand by the cross and speak for God and the life to come. He was, as he pathetically tells us, in a "vagrant state" and "scared at" by men who held the right by patronage to supply vacancies. His preaching, as a rule, he says, was distasteful to these men, but generally acceptable to the common people. To work into the good graces of these great men — men who had "the stroke" — he must lower his pennon, and speak softer, and not hit either so straight or so hard. But he went back to his knees and to his Bible, and rose to preach as his Divine Commentator Christ told him and taught him. Thus was the young man in a grievous strait. Torn between a fervent desire that God should send him his parish and a fear lest, in looking for it, he should soil his soul, he was in much misery — misery of much the same kind as every young probationer in our own day must inevitably pass through if baptized with Mr. Boston's baptism. He wanted to be sure about the sincerity of his aims: and, in such a spirit and serious pass in his life history, he sat down to write the "Soliloquy on the Art of Man-Fishing." But the exact occasion of his penning it can be given by none better than by himself, and here is what he says: —

"During the remaining time that I continued at Ferrytown, I wrote a Soliloquy on the Art of Man-Fishing which was never finished.

The occasion thereof was this — January 6, 1699, reading in secret, my heart was touched with Matt. 4:19, 'Follow me and I will make you fishers of men.'

"My soul cried out for accomplishing of that to me, and I was very desirous to know how I might follow Christ so as to become a fisher of men, and for my own instruction in that point I addressed myself to the consideration of it in that manner. And, indeed, it was much in my heart in these days, not to preach the wisdom of my own heart, or produce of my own gifts, but to depend on the Lord for light that I might, if I could have reached it, been able to say of every word 'Thus saith the Lord.'"

Eight months or thereby after he wrote the soliloquy we find him with faltering foot coming along the road from Duns to preach for this smallest and most meanly endowed of Scottish parishes. He was a tender-hearted, loveable man, wise, grave, industrious, studious, and, above all, in earnest: and the seed sown in little Simprin has sprung up to a great and glorious harvest, on the bounty of which not merely the parishioners of Simprin were spiritually nourished in their day, but a family much larger and far more widely scattered.

It only remains to be added that the Reader has before him, intact, the soliloquy as it left its devout young author's pen, but for one or two verbal alterations in accordance with modern taste.

Thus is it again sent out into the great world where that divinest of all human labours — the toilsome work of man-fishing — is being carried on. May it be blessed! May it make haste and speak a helpful word in the ear of a worldly, wayward, giddy age, and good will surely come of it.

THE ART OF MAN-FISHING.

[For a pattern to every preacher of the Gospel]

Ah! Lord, who has believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed? This day seems to be a day of darkness and gloominess; the glory is departed even to the threshold of the temple. We may call ordinances Ichabod; and name the faithful preachers of Scotland no more Naomi but Marah, for the Lord deals bitterly with them, in so much forsaking his ordinances as at this day. The Lord has forsaken them in a great measure, as to success attending their labours. They toil all the night; but little or nothing is caught: few or none can they find to come into the net. So that Jeremiah's exercise may be theirs, chap. 13:17, "If you will not hear it, my soul shall weep in secret places for your pride; and my eye shall weep sore, and run down with tears."

And you, O my soul, may make this your exercise, if you had a heart that could mourn either for yourself or others. Though indeed it is no great wonder that God does not countenance with much success the like of me, who (if I may or dare class myself among those who are faithful) am the meanest, the most unworthy of them all, not worthy to take his covenant in my mouth, who am a child in piety and the mystery of godliness, though not in years; who am a poor fool, having a weak heart and a shallow head; who might rather be learning of others than teaching them; who can but wade about the outer parts of that depth, into which others can enter far; who have so little love to Christ, and so little pure zeal for his glory; can say so little for the truth, and so little against error; who am altogether unworthy and insufficient for these things: no wonder, I say, God does not countenance me, when others, that are as tall cedars in the Lord's vineyard, do so little good, even others that are great men in the church for piety and learning. But yet seeing I am called out to preach this everlasting gospel, it is my duty to endeavour, and it is my desire to be (Lord, you know) a fisher of men. But, alas! I may come in with my complaints to my Lord, that I have toiled in some measure, but caught nothing, for anything I know, as to the conversion of any one soul. I fear I may say, I have almost spent my strength in vain, and my labour for nought, for Israel is not gathered. O my soul, what may be the cause of this, why does my preaching so little good? No doubt part of the blame lies on myself, and a great part of it too. But who can give help in this case but the Lord himself? and how can I expect it from him but by prayer, and faith in the promises, and by consulting his word, where I may, by his Spirit shining on my heart, (shine, O Sun of righteousness), learn how to carry, and what to do, to the end the gospel preached by me may not be unsuccessful? Therefore my heart cried out after Christ this day, and my soul was moved, when I read that sweet promise of Christ, Matt. 4:19, Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men, directed to those who would follow him. O how my soul longed to follow him, as on other accounts, so on this, that I might be honoured to be a fisher of men; Therefore my soul longed to know what sort of following Christ this is, to which this sweet promise is annexed. I would know it, (Lord, you know), that I might do it, and so catch poor souls by the gospel, and that I might know whether I have a right to this promise or not. O let your light and your truth shine forth, that they may be guides to me in this matter; and let the meditations of my heart be according to your mind, and directed by your unerring Spirit. Grant light and life, O Lord my God!

Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men.

In these words there are two things to be considered.

1. There is a duty, Follow me. Wherein consider, (1.) The object, me, even the Lord Jesus Christ, the chief fisher of men, who was sent by the Father to gather in the lost sheep of the house of Israel, who was and is the infinitely-wise God, and so knew the best way to catch men, and can instruct men how to be fishers of others. (2.) The act, Follow (Gk. come after) me: Leave your employment, and come after me.

Though no doubt there is a direction here to all the ministers of the gospel, that have left their other employments, and betaken themselves to the preaching of the word, viz., that if they would do good to souls, and gain them by their ministry, then they are to imitate Christ, in their carriage and preaching, to make him their pattern, to write after his copy, as a fit mean for gaining of souls.

2. There is a promise annexed to the duty. Wherein we may consider, (1.) The benefit promised; that is, to be made fishers of men; which I take to be not only an investing of them with authority, and a calling of them to the office, but also a promise of the success they should have, that fishing of men should be their employment, and they should not be employed in vain, but following Christ, they should indeed catch men by the gospel. (2.) The fountain-cause of this, I will make you; none other can make you fishers of men but me.

You may observe, 1. Then, O my soul, that it is the Lord Jesus Christ that makes men fishers of men.

Here I shall shew,

I. How Christ makes men fishers of men.

II. Why unconverted men are compared to fish in the water.

III. That ministers are fishers by office.

I. How does Christ make men fishers of men?

In answer to this question, consider spiritual fishing two ways. 1. As to the office and work itself; and 2. As to the success of it.

Firsts He makes them fishers as to their office, by his call, which is twofold, outward and inward, by setting them apart to the office of the ministry; and it is your business, O my soul, to know whether you have it or not. But of this more afterwards.

Secondly, He makes them fishers as to success; that is, he makes them catch men to himself by the power of his spirit accompanying the word they preach, and the discipline they administer, 1 Cor. 1:18, "The preaching of the cross — unto us which are saved, is the power of God." 1 Thess. 1:5, " Our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." He it is that brings sinners into the net which ministers spread; and if he be not with them to drive the fish into the net, they may toil all the night, and day too, and catch nothing.

1. O my soul, then see that gifts will not do the business. A man may preach as an angel, and yet be useless. If Christ withdraw his presence, all will be to no purpose. If the Master of the house be away, the household will loath their food, though it be dropping down about their tent-doors.

2. Why should you then on the one hand, as sometimes you art, be lifted up when you preach a good and solid discourse, wherein gifts do appear, and you get the applause of men? Why, you may do all this, and yet be no fisher of men. The fish may see the bait, and play about it as pleasant, but this is not enough to catch them. On the other hand, why should you be so much discouraged (as many times is the case), because your gifts are so small, and you are but as a child in comparison of others? Why, if Christ will, he can make you a fisher of men, as well as the most learned rabbi in the church, Ps. 8:2. Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings have you ordained strength. Yea, have you not observed how God owned a man very weak in gifts and made him more successful than others that were far beyond him in parts? Has not God put this treasure in earthen vessels, that the power might be seen to be of him? Lift up yourself then, O my soul, Christ can make you a fisher of men, however weak you are. Follow him. My soul desires to follow hard after you, O God!

3. Be concerned then, in the first place, O my soul, for the presence of God in ordinances, and for his power that will make a change among people, Ps. 110:3. When your discourse, though ever so elaborate, shall be but as a lovely song, O set yourself most for this. When you study, send up ejaculations to your Lord for it. When you write a sermon, or do ruminare on it, then say to God, Lord, this will be altogether weak without your power accompanying it. O, power and life from God in ordinances is sweet. Seek it for yourself, and seek it for your hearers. Acknowledge your own weakness and uselessness without it, and so cry incessantly for it, that the Lord may drive the fish into the net, when you are spreading it out. Have an eye to this power, when you are preaching; and think not you to convert men by the force of reason: If you do, you will be beguiled.

4. What an honourable thing is it to be fishers of men! How great an honour should you esteem it, to be a catcher of souls! We are workers together with God, says the apostle. If God has ever so honoured you, O that you knew it, that you might bless his holy name, that ever made such a poor fool as you to be a co-worker with him. God has owned you to do good to those who were before caught. O my soul, bless you the Lord. Lord, what am I, or what is my father's house, that you have brought me to this?

5. Then see you not here what is the reason you toil so long, and catch nothing? The power comes not along. Men are like Samuel, who, when God was calling him, thought it had been Eli. So when you speak many times, they do not discern God's voice, but thine; and therefore the word goes out as it comes in.

6. Then, O my soul, despair not of the conversion of any, be they ever so profligate. For it is the power of the Spirit that drives any person into the net; and this cannot be resisted. Mockers of religion, yea, blasphemers may be brought into the net; and many times the wind of God's Spirit in the word lays the tall cedars in sin down upon the ground, when they that seem to be as low shrubs in respect of them, stand fast upon their root. Publicans and harlots shall enter the kingdom of heaven before self-righteous Pharisees.

7. What think you, O my soul, of that doctrine that lays aside this power of the Spirit, and makes moral suasion all that is requisite to the fishing of men? That doctrine is hateful to you. My soul loathes it, as attributing too much to the preacher, and too much to corrupt nature, in taking away its natural impotency to good, and as against the work of God's Spirit, contrary to experience; and is to me a sign of the rottenness of the heart that embraces it. Alas! that it should be owned by any among us, where so much of the Spirit's power has been felt.

II. But why are unconverted men compared to fish in the water? Among other reasons, they are so,

1. Because as the water is the natural element of fish, so sin is the proper and natural element for an unconverted soul. Take the fish out of the water, it cannot live; and take from a natural man his idols, he is ready to say with Micah, You have taken away my gods, and what have I more? The young man in the gospel could not be persuaded to seek after treasure in heaven, and lay by the world. It is in sin that the only delight of natural men is; but in holiness they have no more delight than a fish upon the earth, or a sow in a palace. Oh the woeful case of a natural man! Bless the Lord, O my soul, that when that was your element as well as that of others, yet Christ took you in his net, held you, and would not let you go, and put another principle in you, so that now it is heavy for you to wade, far more to swim in these waters.

2. The fish in a sunny day are seen to play themselves in the water. So the unregenerate, whatever grief they may seem to have upon their spirits, when a storm arises, either without, by outward troubles, or within by conscience-gnawing convictions, yet when these are over, and they are in a prosperous state, they play themselves in the way of sin, and take their pleasure in it, not considering what it may cost them at the last. Oh! how does prosperity in the world ruin many a soul! The prosperity of fools shall destroy them. And O how destructive would prosperity have been to you, O my soul, if God had given it to you many times when you would have had it! Bless the Lord that ever he was pleased to cross you in a sinful course.

3. As the fish greedily look after and snatch at the bait, not minding the hook; even so natural men drink in sin greedily, as the ox drinks in the water. They look on sin as a sweet morsel; and it is to them sweet in the mouth, though bitter in the belly. They play with it, as the fish with the bait; but, oh! alas, when they take the serpent in their bosom, they mind not the sting, Prov. 9:17, 18. The devil knows well how to dress his hooks; but, alas! men know not by nature how to discern them. Pity then, O my soul, the wicked of the world, whom you see greedily satisfying their lusts. Alas! they are poor blinded souls; they see the bait, but not the hook; and therefore it is that they are even seen as it were dancing about the mouth of the pit; therefore rush they on to sin as a horse to the battle, not knowing the hazard. O pity the poor drunkard, the swearer, the unclean person, etc., that is wallowing in his sin. Bless you the Lord also, O my soul, that when you were playing with the bait, and as little minding the hook as others, God opened your eyes, and let you see your madness and danger, that you might flee from it. And O be now careful that you snatch at none of the devil's baits, lest he catch you with his hook: for though you may be restored again by grace, yet it shall not be without a wound; as the fish sometimes slip the hook, but go away wounded; which wound may be sad to you, and long a-healing. And this you have experienced.

4. As fish in the water love deep places and wells, and are most frequently found there; so wicked men have a great love to carnal security, and have no will to strive against the stream. Fish love deep places best, where there is least noise. O how careful are natural men to keep all quiet, that there may be nothing to disturb them in their rest in sin! they love to be secure, which is their destruction. O my soul, beware of carnal security, of being secure, though plunged over head and ears in sin.

5. As fish are altogether unprofitable as long as they are in the water, so are wicked men in their natural estate, they can do nothing that is really good: they are unprofitable to themselves, and unprofitable to others: what good they do to others, is more incidental than purposeful, Rom. 3:12. How far must they then be mistaken, who think the wicked of the world the most useful in the place where they live! They may indeed be useful for carrying on designs for Satan's interest, or their own vain glory; but really to lay out themselves for God, they cannot.

III. Ministers are fishers by office; they are catchers of the souls of men, sent "to open the eyes of the blind, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God," Preachers of the gospel are fishers, and their work and that of fishers agree in several things.

1. The design and work of fishers is to catch fish. This is the work that preachers of the gospel have taken in hand, even to endeavour to bring souls to Christ. Their design in their work should be the same. Tell me, O my soul, what is your design in preaching? for what end do you lay the net in the water? is it to show your gifts, and to gain the applause of men? Oh, no! Lord, you know my gifts are very small; and had I not some other thing than them to lean to, I had never gone to a pulpit. I confess, that, for as small as they are, the devil and my corruptions do sometimes present them to me in a magnifying glass, and so would blow me up with wind. But, Lord, you know it is my work to repel these, motions. An instance of this see in my Diary.

" Jan. I, 1699. I had more than an ordinary measure of God's presence and help in preaching. In the morning in secret I was earnest with God for it, but had a temptation to think that God would leave me, which perplexed me sore. When I was coming home from the Sermons, Satan fell to, afresh again, the contrary way, tempting me to pride. It came three times remarkably on me, and was as often repelled by that word 'What do you have that you have not received?'"

2. Their work is hard work; they are exposed to much cold in the water. So is the minister's work.

3. A storm that will affright others, they will venture on, that they may not lose their fish. So should preachers of the gospel do.

4. Fishers catch fish with a net. So preachers have a net to catch souls with. This is the everlasting gospel, the word of peace and reconciliation, wherewith sinners are caught. It is compared to a net wherewith fishers catch fish,

(1.) Because it is spread out, ready to catch all that will come into it, Is. 55:1, "Ho, every one who thirsts, come to the waters; and he who has no money, come, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk, without money, and without price." God excludes none from the benefits of the gospel that will not exclude themselves; it is free to all.

(2.) Because as fish are taken unexpectedly by the net, so are sinners by the gospel. Zaccheus was little thinking on salvation from Christ when he went to the tree. Paul was not thinking on a sweet meeting with Christ, whom he persecuted, when he was going post-haste on the devil's errand; but the man is caught unexpectedly. Little were you thinking, O my soul, on Christ, heaven, or yourself, when you went to the Newton of Whitsome, to hear a preaching, when Christ first dealt with you; there you got an unexpected cast.

(3.) As fish sometimes come near and touch the net, and yet draw back; so many souls are somewhat affected at the hearing of the gospel, and yet remain in the gall of bitterness and the bond of iniquity. So Herod heard John the Baptist gladly, but yet the poor man was not caught. Wonder not then, O my soul, that you see some affected in the time of preaching; and yet when they are away again, all is worn off.

(4.) Some fish that have not been taken fast hold enough by the net, struggle and get out again. So some souls have their convictions, and may seem to be caught; but yet, alas! they stifle all their convictions, stay in the place of the breaking forth; their goodness is like the morning cloud, and as the early dew that soon passes away. So, O my soul, if ever you are taken up with exercised consciences, have a care that you do not apply the cure before the wound be deep enough. Take all means to understand whether the soul be content to take Christ on his own terms or not. Alas! many this way, by having the wound scabbed over, are rather killed than cured.

(5.) All that are taken in the net do make some struggling to get free. Even so every one whom the Lord deals with by his Word and Spirit, make some kind of resistance before they are thoroughly caught. And this you also know, O my soul, how you would have been content to have been out of the net. Oh! the wickedness of the heart of man by nature! opposite is it, and an enemy to all that may be for its eternal welfare. There is indeed a power in our will to resist, yea, and such a power as cannot but be exercised by the will of man, which can do nothing but resist, till the overcoming power of God come and make the unwilling heart willing, Phil, 2:13.

(6). Yet this struggling will not do with those which the net has fast enough. So neither will the resistance do that is made by an elect soul, whom God intends to catch, John 6:37. All that the Father has given me, shall come to me. Indeed, God does not convert men to himself against their will, he does not force the soul to receive Christ; but he conquers the will, and it becomes obedient. He who was unwilling before, is then willing. O the power of grace! When God speaks, then men shall hear; then the dead hear the voice of the Son of Man, and those who hear live.

(7.) In a net are many meshes in which the fish are caught. Such are the invitations made to sinners in the gospel, the sweet promises made to them that will come to Christ; these are the meshes wherewith the soul is caught. This then is gospel-preaching, thus to spread out the net of the gospel, wherein are so many meshes of various invitations and promises, to which if the fish do come, they are caught. — But yet,

(8.) Lest the net be lifted up with the water, and so not fit for taking fish, and the fish slight it, and pass under it; there are some pieces of lead put to it, to hold it right in the water, that it may be before them as they come. So lest invitations and promises of the gospel be slighted, there must be used some legal terrors and law- threatenings to drive the fish into the net. You see then that both law and gospel are to be preached, the law assisting the gospel-net, which makes it effectual; the law being a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ.

(9.) The meshes must not be over-wide, lest the fish run through. So neither must your doctrine be general, without particular application, lest you be no fisher of men. Indeed men may be the better pleased, when you preach doctrine so as wicked men may run out-through and in-through it, than when you make it so as to take hold of them: but be not a servant of men.

(10.) Neither must they be too neat and fine, and curiously wrought, lest they hold out the fish. So have a care, O my soul, of striving to make by wit any fine and curious discourse, which your hearers cannot understand. Of this more afterwards.

5. Fishers observe in what places they should cast their nets, and where they may expect fish. So do you, O my soul, observe where you may catch souls. There are two pools wherein the net should be set.

(i.) In the public assemblies of the Lord's people. There it was that Lydia's heart was opened. The pool of ordinances sometimes is made healing water to souls pining away in their iniquity.

(2.) In private conference. Many times the Lord is pleased to bless this for the good of souls. Some have found it so. But more of these things afterwards, when I come to following Christ.

6. Lastly, Fishers may toil long, and yet catch nothing; but they do not therefore lay aside their work. So may preachers preach long, and yet not catch any soul, Isa. 49:4, and 53:1; but they are not to give over for all that. O my soul, here you are checked for your behaviour at some times under the absence of Christ from ordinances, when you have been ready to wish you had never taken it in hand. This was my sin: the good Lord pardon it. It becomes me better to lie low under God's hand, and to inquire into the causes of his withdrawing his presence from me and from ordinances, and yet to hold on in duty till he be pleased to lay me by. Have a care of that, O my soul, and let not such thoughts and wishes possess you again. Forget not how God made you to read this your sin, in your punishment, Diary, Nov. 13, 1698. Hold on, O my soul, and give not way to these discouragements. You know not but Christ may come and teach you to let down the net at the right side of the ship, and you may yet be a fisher of men. Trust God you shall yet praise him for the help of his countenance as you have done, and perhaps for some souls that you may be yet honoured to catch.

And thus I have briefly considered these things. But the main question that I would have resolved is, How may I come by this art? what way I shall take to be a fisher of men? how I may order and set the net, that it may bring in souls to God? this the great Master of assemblies sets down in the first part of the verse. Whence, Observe, 2. O my soul, that the way for me to be a fisher of men, is to follow Christ. What it is to follow you, O Lord, shew me; and, Lord, help me to do it.

Here two things are to be considered.

I. What following Christ supposes and implies.

II. Wherein Christ is to be followed.

I. What following Christ supposes and implies.

Firsts It presupposes life. A dead man cannot follow any person; a dead preacher cannot follow Christ; there must be a principle of life, spiritual life in him, or else he is nought. Therefore have I said and maintained, that a man cannot be a minister of God, though he may a minister of the church, without grace in his heart. This is a spiritual following of Christ; and therefore presupposes a spiritual and heavenly principle. Tell me then, O my soul, what state are you in? You were once dead, that is sure, Eph. 2:1, dead in trespasses and sins. Are you raised out of your grave? have you got a part in the first resurrection? has Christ breathed on your dead and dry bones? or are you yet void of spiritual life? are you rotting away in your iniquity? What say you to this? If you are yet dead, your case is lamentable; but if you are alive, what signs of life are there to be seen in you? I have my own doubts of this, because of the prevailing of corruption: therefore I will see what I can say to this.

1 A man that has the Spirit has life, Rom. 8:2, 9; but I think I have the Spirit: ergo, I have life. That I have the Spirit, I conclude from these grounds following.

(1.) I have light that sometimes I had not. See John 14:26, "The Comforter — shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance whatever I have said unto you." I see now otherwise than sometimes I saw. Once was I blind, but now I see, though I see but men as trees. Once was I darkness, but now am I light (though weak) in the Lord. This light makes me see,

[1.] My former darkness, the sad and miserable state that once I was in, ignorant of God, Christ, and religion, save going to the church, and keeping from banning and swearing, &c, which I was restrained from, from a child. This makes me see my present darkness, 1 Cor. 13:12. How little a portion do I know of you, O God? My knowledge is but as the twilight.

[2.] It lets me see my heart-sins, my imperfections and shortcomings in the best of my duties; so that God might damn me for them. The hypocrites say, Why have we fasted and you see not? etc., Isa. 58:3. It lets me see the wanderings of my heart in duty and out of duty, yea, the the sinfulness of the first risings of lust in my heart, Rom. vii., and is still discovering the baseness of my heart unto me, so that I am forced to think and say, that at the best I am unclean, unclean.

[3.] It makes me to see Christ precious (1 Pet. 2:7), altogether lovely, the chief among ten thousand, preferable to all the world; for whom, if my heart deceive me not (Lord, you know), I would undergo the loss of what I most esteem in the world. " Whom have I in heaven but you? and there is none on earth that I desire besides you." For indeed, "My heart and flesh faints and fails; but you are the strength of my heart O Lord," Ps. 73:25, 26.

[4. j It lets me see my need of him; so that nothing else but Christ, I am persuaded, can help me. When I have done what I can, I am but an unprofitable servant. If I should do a thousand times more than I do, I count all but loss and dung or the excellency of the knowledge of Jesus Christ my Lord. My soul cries out for you, O God, and follows hard after you.

[5.] The knowledge that I have of Christ, makes me trust in him in some measure, Ps. 9: 10; though alas! my evil heart of unbelief creates a great deal of difficulty in that to me. I find him a present help in the time of trouble; therefore I endeavour to cast my burden upon him. I know him to be a good Master, and therefore I lean on him for help for his own work. I know his grace is sufficient for me; therefore, in temptation and trials, I endeavour to lift up my soul to him.

(2.) I feel help in duty from the Spirit. I know not what I should pray for; but the Spirit helps my infirmities, Rom. 8:26. Many times I have gone to prayer very dead, and have come away with life; I have gone with a drooping and fainting heart, and come away rejoicing; with an heart closed, and have come away with an heart enlarged, and have felt enlargement both as to words and affections; and this has made me both thankful and more vile in my own eyes, that God should have done so with the like of me, 1 Chron. 29:14.

2. He who has sense and feeling has life; but I have sense and feeling; ergo, I have life, Eph. 4:19. My sins are a burden to me (Matt. 11:28), Lord, you know my omissions and commissions, the sins of my thoughts and of my life, the sins of my youth, etc., and above all, that which is my daily trouble, is an evil, backsliding, and base heart, which I find deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked, Jer. 17:9. This body of sin and death makes me to groan, and long to be rid of it, Rom. 7:24. And what a load it was to me this day, God knows. I feel God's presence, which makes me to rejoice sometimes; at other times again I feel his absence. You, O Lord, hide your face, and I am troubled, Ps. 30:7. His smiles are sweet as honey from the comb, and his frowns are bitter as death to my soul.

3. He in whom there is heat has life; but I have a heat in my soul; ergo, I have life. I find a threefold flame, though weak, in my heart.

(1.) A flame of love to Christ, Rom. 5:5. My soul loves him above all; and I have felt my love to Christ more vigorous within this short while, than for a considerable time before. Lord, put fuel to this flame. I have a love to his truths that I know, what God reveals to me of his word, Ps. 119:19. I find sometimes his word sweeter to me than honey from the comb, Ps. 19:10. It comforts and supports me. I cannot but love it; it stirs me up, and quickens my soul when dead. I love his commands, though striking against my corruptions, Rom. 7:22. I love the promises, as sweet cordials to a fainting soul, as life from the dead to one trodden under foot by the apprehensions of wrath, or the prevailing of corruption. I love his threatenings as most just; my soul heartily approves them. If any man love not the Lord Jesus, let him be anathema, maranatha. The least part of truth, that God makes known to me, I love; and, by grace, would endeavour to adhere to. I love those in whom the image of God does appear; though otherwise mean and contemptible, my heart warms towards them, i John 3:14. I love his work, and am glad when it thrives (Rom. 1:8), though alas! there is little ground for such gladness now. I love his ordinances (Ps. 84:1) and what bears his stamp; though all this be but weak, I love his glory, that he should be glorified, come of me what will.

(2.) I find in my heart a flame of desires, Matt. 5:6. [1.] After the righteousness of Christ. My soul earnestly desires to be stript naked of my own righteousness, which is as rags, and to be clothed and adorned with the robe of his righteousness. This wedding garment my soul affects; so shall I be found without spot, when the Master of the feast comes in to see the guests. My soul is satisfied, and acquiesces in justification by an imputed righteousness, though, alas! my base heart would fain have a home-spun garment of its own sometimes. [2.] After communion with him, Ps. 42:1. When I want it, my soul though sometimes careless, yet, at other times, cries out, O that I knew where I might find him! I have found much sweetness, in communion with God, especially at the sacrament of the Lord's supper, in prayer and meditation, hearing the word, faithfully and seriously preached, and in preaching it myself, when the candle of the Lord shines on my tabernacle; then was it a sweet exercise to my soul. I endeavour to keep it up when I have it, by watching over my heart, and sending up ejaculations to God. When I want it, I cry to him for it, though, alas! I have been a long time very careless. Sometimes my soul longs for the day, when my minority shall be over-past, and I be entered heir to the inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fades not away; to be quit of this evil world; to be dissolved, and to be with Christ, which is best of all; especially at three times, (1.) When I get more than ordinarily near God, when my soul is satisfied as with marrow and fat, when my heart is ennobled, and tramples on the world. (2.) When I am wrestling and groaning under the body of sin and death, the evil heart: then fain would I be there, where Satan cannot tempt, and sin cannot enter; yea, when I have been much forsaken, at least as to comfort, Diary, Aug. 2, 1696, where is the most eminent instance of it. (3.) When I preach, and see that the gospel has not success, but people are unconcerned, and go on in their abominations.

(3.) I find in my heart some heat of zeal for God, which vents itself, [1.] By endeavouring to be active for God in my station. So when I was at K. I endeavoured to do something for God, though, alas! it did some of them no good. Before I entered on trials, one main motive was to have opportunity to give a testimony against sin, and to see if I could be an instrument to reclaim any soul from their wicked way. This I have, as the Lord enabled me, done, since I was a preacher, testifying against sin freely and plainly, and as earnestly as I could, by grace assisting me, though in weakness. And, Lord, you know that my great desire is to catch men, and to get for that end my whole furniture from you, laying aside my own wisdom. And if I could do this, how satisfying would it be to my soul, that desires to do good to others, though I myself should perish? Therefore do I not spare this weak body, and therefore have I desired never to be idle, but to go unspent for sometimes. Yet my conscience tells me of much slackness in this point, when I have been in private with people, and have not reproved them as I ought, when they offended, being much plagued with want of freedom in private converse. This I have in the Lord's strength resolved against, and have somewhat now amended it. [2.] It vents itself in indignation against sin in myself and others. Many times have I thought on that of the apostle, Yea, what revenge! when I have been overcome by a temptation, being content as it were to be revenged on myself, and as it were content to subscribe a sentence of damnation against myself, and so to justify the Lord in his just proceedings against me. And, Lord, do not I hate those who hate you I am I not grieved with those who rise up against you? The reproaches cast on you, have fallen on me, Ps. 49:9 And my heart rises and is grieved, when I see transgressors, that they keep not your law. [3.] It vents itself in grieving for those things that I cannot help. Lord, you know how weighty the sins of this land have been unto me, how they have lien and do lie somewhat heavy on me; and at this time in particular, the laxness of many in joining with the people of these abominations, the unfaithfulness of some professors, the lack of zeal for God in not making a more narrow search for the accursed thing in our camp, now when God's wrath is going out violently against us, and not making an acknowledgment of sins and renewing our national vows, according as our progenitors did, many as it were thinking shame of the covenant, of whom the Church of Scotland may be ashamed.

4. Growth and motion is an evidence of life; (Ps. 92:12, 13, 14). I move forward towards heaven, my affections are going out after Christ, and endeavouring to make progress in a Christian walk. I think I discern a growth of these graces in me. (1.) Of knowledge and acquaintance with Christ, 2 Pet. 3:18. I am more acquainted with Christ and his ways than before. Though I have not such uptakings of Christ as I ought to have, yet I have more than I have had in this respect sometimes before. (2.) A growth of love. If my heart deceive me not, I have found love to Christ within this month more lively and vigorous than before, my soul more affected with his absence from ordinances than ever. (3.) Of faith. I can, I think, trust God more now than before. I have had more experience of his goodness and knowledge of his name; and therefore think I can cast my burden on the Lord better than before. But it is easy swimming when the head is held up. Lord, increase my faith. I believe, Lord, help my unbelief. (4.) Of watchfulness. I have felt the sad effects of unwatchfulness over my heart in times past. I feel the good of watchfulness now; my soul is habitually more watchful than before; neither dare I give such liberty to my heart as sometimes I gave. Yet for all this the Lord may well complain of me, that he is broken with my wanton heart. But, Lord, you know it is also breaking to myself that it is so. The Lord seal these things to me. (5.) Of contempt of the world, which, blessed, be God, is on the increase with me.

Secondly, Following Christ implies a knowledge of the way that Christ took. No man can follow the example of another as such, unless he know what way he lived. So neither can any man follow Christ with respect to the catching of men in particular, unless he know Christ's way of catching souls, that is, so far as it may be followed by us. Acquaint then yourself, O my soul, with the history of the gospel wherein this appears, and take special notice of these things, that you may follow Christ. What a sad case must they be in that are not acquainted with this!

Thirdly, It supposes sense of weakness, and the need of a guide. A man that knows a way, and can do well enough without a guide, needs not follow another. And surely the want of this is the reason why many run before Christ, and go farther than his example ever called them; and others take a way altogether different from Christ's way, which is the product of their own conceited hearts and airy heads. But you, O my soul, acknowledge yourself as a child in these matters, that cannot go unless it be led; as a stranger in a desert place, that cannot keep the right way without a guide. Acknowledge and be affected with your own weakness and emptiness, which you may well be persuaded of. And for this end reflect seriously, 1. On that word, 2 Cor. 2:16. Who is sufficient for these things? No man is of himself sufficient; even the greatest of men come short of sufficiency. This may make you then to be affected with insufficiency, who are so far below these men, as shrubs are below the tall cedars; and yet they cannot teach it of themselves. 2. Consider the weight of the work, even of preaching, which is all that you have to do now. It is the concern of souls. By the foolishness of preaching it pleases the Lord to save them that believe, and as you thought yesterday [Jan. 22, 1699], before you went to the pulpit, it may seal the salvation of some, and the damnation of others. To preach in the Spirit, in the power and demonstration thereof, is no easy matter. Thy pitiful gifts will not fit you for this. 3. Reflect on what you are when God is pleased to desert thee; how then you tug and row, but it will not do, either in studying or delivering sermons. I think you have had as much of this as may teach you to beware of taking your burden on your own soul, but to cast it on the Lord. [See Diary, June 3, July 3, Dec. 31, 1698. Jan. 6, 1699, etc.] 4. Consider what a small portion you know of God. When you are at the best, and when you are in your meridian, yet how low are you? and how far short you come of what you should be at. Lastly, consider that though you had gifts like an angel, yet you can not convert a soul unless Christ be with you to do the work. Therefore acknowledge yourself a weak creature, insufficient for the work; and go not out in your own strength, but in the name of the Lord; and so although you are but as a stripling, you may be helped to cast down the great Goliaths that defy the armies of the living God.

Fourthly; It implies a renouncing of our own wisdom. It must not be the guide that we must follow, Matt. 16:24. Paul would not preach with wisdom of words, 1 Cor. 1:17; he did not follow the rules of carnal wisdom. Therefore, O my soul, renounce your own wisdom. Seek the wisdom that is from above; seek to preach the words of the living God, and not your own. Since you were most set to take this way, and prayed most that you might not preach what might be the product of your own wisdom and natural reason, but what might be given you of the Holy Ghost, you have found that God has signally countenanced you. Take not the way of natural wisdom, follow not the rules of carnal wisdom. Its language will always be, Master, spare yourself; have a care of your credit and reputation among men. If you speak freely, they will call you a railer, and your preaching reflections; every parish will scare at you as a monster of men, and one who would preach them all to hell; and so you shall not be settled. Such and such a man, that has a great influence in a parish, will never like you. That way of preaching is not the way to gain people; that startles them at the very first. You may bring them on by little and little, by being somewhat smooth, at least at the first: for this generation is not able to abide such doctrine as that you preach. But hear you and follow the rules of the wisdom that is from above: for the wisdom of the world is foolishness with God; what is in high esteem among men, is nought in the sight of God. The wisdom that is from above will tell you, that you must be denied to your credit and reputation, etc., Matt. 16:24; Luke 14:26. It will tell you, Let them call you what they will, that you must cry aloud, and spare not; lift up your voice like a trumpet, etc., Is. 58:1. It will tell you, that God has appointed the bounds of men's habitation, Acts 17:26. It will tell you, that not many wise, not many mighty, not many noble, are called, etc., i Cor. 1:29. Whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, you shall speak God's words unto them, Ezek. 2:7. It will shew you rules quite contrary to those of carnal wisdom. Let me consider then what carnal wisdom says to me, and what the wisdom from above says.

CARNAL WISDOM.

Thy body is weak, spare it, and weary it not; it cannot abide toil, labour, and weariness; spare yourself then.

Labour to get neat and fine expressions; for these do very much commend a preaching to the learned; and without these they think nothing of it.

Endeavour to be somewhat smooth in preaching, and calm; and do not go out upon the particular sins of the land, or of the persons to whom you preach.

SPIRITUAL WISDOM.

Your body is God's as well as your spirit; spare it not for glorifying God, 1 Cor. 6:20. "In weariness and painfulness," 2 Cor. 11:27. "He gives power to the faint, and to them that have no might he increases strength," Is. 40:29. This you have experienced.

Christ sent you to "preach the gospel not with wisdom of words," 1 Cor. 1:17. Go not to them with "excellency of speech, or of wisdom," 1 Cor. 2:1. Let not your speech and preaching be with "the enticing words of man's wisdom," ver. 4.

"Cry aloud, and spare not, lift up your voice like a trumpet: shew my people their sins," Is. 58:1. —

If you will not do so, they will be irritated against you, and may create you trouble; and what a foolish thing would it be for you to speak boldly to such a generation as this, whose very looks are terrible?

It is a dangerous way to speak freely, and condescend on particulars: there may be more hazard in it than you are aware of.

You will be looked on as a fool, as a monster of men; you will be called a railer; and so lose your reputation and credit, and you had need to preserve that. Men will hate and abhor thee; and why should you expose yourself to these things?

"Open rebuke is better than secret love," Prov. 27:5. "Study to shew yourself approved unto God, rightly dividing the word of truth," 2 Tim. 2:15.

"He who rebukes a man, afterwards shall find more favour than he who flatters with the tongue," Prov. 28:23. I have experience of this. "Fear them not, neither be afraid at their looks, though they be a rebellious house. I have made your face strong against their faces," Ezek. 3:8, 9. Experience confirms this.

" He who walks uprightly, walks surely," Prov. 10:9. " Whoso walks uprightly shall be saved," chap, 28:18.

"You must become a fool, that you may be wise," 1 Cor. 3:18. "We are made a spectacle to the world," chap. 4:9, see ver. 10. "The servant is not greater than his lord," John 5:20, compared with chap. 10:20. "He has a devil, and is mad, why hear you him?" If you will be Christ's disciple, "you must deny yourself," Matt. 16:24. "If the world hate you, you know it hated me before it hated you," John 15:18, says our Lord.

Great people especially will be offended at you, if you speak not fair to them and court and caress them. And if you are looked down upon by great people, who are wise and mighty, what will you think of your preaching?

Our people are new come out from under Prelacy, and they would not desire to have sins told particularly, and especially old sores to be ripped up. They cannot abide that doctrine. Other doctrine would take better with them. Hold off such things; for it may well do them ill. It will do them no good.

If you will preach such things, yet prudence requires that you speak of them very warily. Though conscience says you must, yet speak them somewhat covertly, that you may not offend them sore, and especially with respect to them that are but coming in yet, and do not fill them with prejudices at first; you may get occasion afterwards.

"Accept no man's person, neither give flattering titles to man: for, in so doing, your Maker will soon take you away," Job 32:21, 22. " Few of the rulers believe on Christ," John 7:48. "Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called, " 1 Cor. 1:26. " ' ' Speak you God's word to kings, and be not ashamed," Ps. 119:46.

"You shall speak my words unto them, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, for they are most rebellious," Ezek. 2:7.

"Give them warning from me. If you do it not, they shall die in their sins, but their blood will I require at your hand," chap. 3:17, 18. "What the Lord saith to you, that do you speak," 1 Kings 22:14.

" Cry aloud, and spare not," Is. 58:1. " Cursed be he who doth the work of the Lord deceitfully," Jer. 48:10. " Handle not the word of the Lord deceitfully." Peter, at the first, told the Jews that were but coming in to hear, " Him (Christ) you have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain," Acts 2:23. "Work while it is called to-day; the night comes wherein you can not work," John 9: 4.

Be but fair especially to them that have the stroke in parishes, till you are settled in a parish to get stipend. If you will not do so, you may look for toiling up and down then; for parishes will scare at you, and will not call you, and how will you live? And so such a way of preaching will be to your loss, whereas otherwise it might be better with you.

" To have respect of persons is not good; for, for a piece of bread that man will transgress," Prov. 28:21. "The will of the Lord be done," Acts 21:14. "God has determined your time, before appointed, and the bounds of your habitation," Acts 17:26. "And his counsel shall stand, oppose it who will," Is. 16:10. "It is God that sets the solitary in families," Ps. 68:6. "If you are faithful, you shall abound with blessings; but if you make haste to be rich, you shall not be innocent," Prov. 28:20.

Thus you see, O my soul, how that carnal wisdom, notwithstanding it speaks fair and with a good deal of seeming reason, is quite contrary to the wisdom that is from above. It promises fair, but its promises are not always performed; it threatens sore, but neither do its threatenings always come to pass; it makes molehills mountains, and mountains molehills: therefore reject the wisdom of the world, for it is foolishness with God. Carnal policy would make you fear him that can but kill the body, yea that cannot do so much now, and to cast off the true fear of God. O my soul, remember that word, and make use of it for strengthening you, Prov. 29:25. The fear of man brings a snare; but whoso putteth his trust in the Lord shall be safe. Never go to seek temporal profit by putting your soul in hazard, but wait you on the Lord, and keep his way, and he shall exalt you to inherit the land, Ps. 37:34; for his way is the safest way, however carnal wisdom may speak otherwise of it, and may account the following of it mere folly; but remember you, that the foolishness of God is wiser than men, 1 Cor. 1:27.

Fifthly, It supposes, that we must not make men our rule, to follow them any farther than they follow Christ. Be you followers of me, says the apostle, as I am of Christ, 1 Cor. 11:1. Wherein they follow Christ I may follow them, but in nothing else. All men are fallible; the greatest of men have had their own spots. Luther's opinion of Christ's corporal presence in the sacrament affords a notable instance of this. Therefore, O my soul, let not man's authority prevail with you to go off the road at all. If Christ himself tell you not, O my soul, where he feeds, you may be left to turn aside to the flocks of his companions. Have a care of putting the servants of the Lord in his own room: but follow you him.

II. Wherein is Christ to be followed; what are those things in him that I must imitate him in? what was the copy that he did cast, which I must write after, in order to my being a fisher of men? What he did by divine power is inimitable; I am not called to follow him, in converting sinners by my own power; to work miracles for the confirmation of the doctrine that I preach, etc. But there are some things wherein he is imitable, and must be followed by preachers, if they would expect to be made fishers of men. First Christ took not on him the work of preaching the gospel without a call, Is. 56:1, "For (says he) the Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, because the Lord has anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek, he has sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound." In this he must be followed by those who would be catchers of men. He was sent by the Father to preach the gospel; he went not to the work without his Father's commission. Men must have a call to this work, Heb. 5:4. They that run unsent, that take on the work without a call from God, cannot expect to do good to a people, Rom. 10:14, Jer. 23. I sent them not; therefore they shall not profit this people. Tell me then, O my soul, whether you have thus followed Christ or not? Had you a call from God to this work of the preaching of the gospel? or have you run unsent?

In answer to this, I must consider that there is a twofold call, an extraordinary and an ordinary call. The first of these I was not to seek, nor may I pretend to it. The question then is, Whether I had an ordinary call from God or not to preach the gospel?

There are these four things in an ordinary call which do make it up.

i. Knowledge of the doctrine of the Christian religion above that of ordinary professors, 2 Tim. 3:16, 17. This I endeavoured to get by study, and prayer unto the Lord; and did attain to it in some measure, though far below the pitch that I would be at. My knowledge was lawfully tried by the church, and they were satisfied.

2. Aptness to teach, some dexterity of communicating unto others that knowledge, 1 Tim. 3:2; 2 Tim. 2:2. This was also tried by the church, and they were satisfied. This has been acknowledged by others whom I have taught; and God has given me some measure of it, however small.

3. A will some way ready to take on the work of preaching the gospel, 1 Pet. 5:2. This I had, for anything I know, since ever the Lord dealt with my soul, unless it was in a time of distress. And though I did a long time sit the call of the church, in not entering on trials, when they would have had me, yet this was not for want of will but ability for the work, and want of clearness for entering on such a great work at that time. I had notwithstanding some desire to that work, which desire my conscience bears me witness, did not arise from the desire of worldly gain, for I would have desired that then, and would go on in the work now, though there were no such thing to be had by it, yea through grace, though I should meet with trouble for it. Neither was it the love of vain glory, Lord, you know, but that I might be capable to do something for God. I remember, that when I was a boy at the school, I desired to be a preacher of the gospel, because of all men ministers were most taken up about spiritual things. This my desire to the work did then run upon.

4. The call of the church, which I had without any motion from myself, not only to enter on trials, but, being approved, to preach the gospel as a probationer for the ministry; which does say, that what I have done in this work, I have not done without a call from God in an ordinary way, and that I have not run unseent. For confirmation of this my call, I refer to my Diary, some things to this purpose being noted there, all which I cannot here set down. Perhaps, if leisure permit, I shall extract them by themselves in order. Blessed be the Lord that made my darkness as noon day.

Secondly, Christ designed his Father's glory in the work. It was not honour, applause, and credit from men that he sought, but purely the Father's glory. Men that design not this, cannot be useful to the church. This all actions are to level at; it is what in all things should be designed as the ultimate end. Whether therefore you eat or drink, or whatsoever you do, do all to the glory of God. You see then that you, O my soul, must follow Christ in this, if you would be a fisher of men. Lift up your heart to this noble end, and in all, especially in your preaching of the gospel, keep this before your eyes. Beware of seeking your own glory by preaching. Look not after popular applause; if you do, you have your reward (Matt. 6:2), look for no more. O my soul, invert not the order, Cant. 8:12, "You, O Solomon, must have a thousand, and those who keep the fruit thereof two hundred." Have a care of taking a thousand to yourself, and giving God only two hundred. Let his honour be before your eyes; trample on your own credit and reputation, and sacrifice it, if need be, to God's honour. And to help you to this, consider,

1. That all you have is given you of God. What have you that you have not received? What an unreasonable thing is it then not to use for his glory what he gives thee; yea, what ingratitude is it? and do you not hate the character of an ungrateful person?
2. Consider that what you have is a talent' given you by your great Master to improve till he comes again. If you improve it for him, then you shall get your reward. If you will make your own gain thereby, and what you should improve for him, you improve for yourself, what can you look for then but that God shall take your talent from you, and command to cast you as an unprofitable and unfaithful servant into utter darkness, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth? God has given some great talents; if they improve them for vain-glory to themselves to gain the popular applause, or the Hosannas of the learned, and so sacrifice all to their own net; what a sad meeting will such have at the great day with Christ? What master would endure that servant, to whom he has given money wherewith to buy a suit of good clothes to his master, if he should take that money, and buy therewith a suit to himself, which his master should have had? How can it be thought that God will suffer to go unpunished such a preacher as he has given a talent of gifts to, if he shall use these merely to gain a stipend or applause to himself therewith, not respecting the glory of his Master? Woe to you, O my soul, if you take this path wherein destroyers of men's souls and of their own go.
3. Consider that the applause of the world is nothing worth. It is hard to be gotten; for readily the applause of the unlearned is given to him whom the learned despise, and the learned applaud him whom the common people care not for. And when it is got, what have you? A vain empty puff of wind. They think much of you, you think much of yourself, and in the meantime God thinks nothing of you. Remember, O my soul, what Christ said to the Pharisees, Luke 16:15, "You are those who justify yourselves before men, but God knows your hearts. For what is highly esteemed among men, is an abomination in the sight of God." Let this scare you from seeking yourself.

4. Consider, that seeking your own glory is a dreadful and abominable thing. (1.) In that you then put yourself in God's room. His glory should be what you should aim at, but then your base self must be sacrificed too. O tremble at this, O my soul, and split not on this rock, otherwise you shall be dashed in pieces. (2.) In that it is the most gross dissembling with God that can be. You pretend to preach Christ to a people; but seeking your own glory, you preach yourself, and not him. You pretend to be commending Christ and the ways of God to souls, and yet in the meantime you commend yourself. Will Christ sit with such a mocking of him? O my soul, beware of it; look not for it, but for his glory. Who would not take it for a base affront, to send a servant or a friend to court a woman for him, if he should court her for himself? And will not Christ be avenged on self-preaching ministers much more? (3.) In that it is base treachery and cruelty to the souls of hearers, when a man seeks to please their fancy more than to gain their souls, to get people to approve him more than to get them to approve themselves to God. This is a soul-murdering way, and it is dear-bought applause that is won by the blood of souls. O my soul, beware of this. Let them call you what they will; but seek God's glory and their good.

5. Consider that so to do is a shrewd sign of a graceless, Christless, and faithless heart, John 5:44. How can you believe, that receive honour one of another, and seek not the honour that comes from God only? A grain of faith will cure this lightness of the head and heart.

6. Consider, my soul, your own vileness? What are you but a poor lump of clay, as to your body, that will soon return to the dust, and be a sweet morsel for the worms that now you trample upon! Have you not seen how loathsome the body is many times in life, by filthy boils and other noisome diseases, and after death what an ugly aspect it has? Forget not the sight that you saw once in the churchyard of Dunse, how a body, perhaps sometime beautiful, was like thin mortar, but much more vile and abominable. The time will come that you will be such yourself. But what are you as to your heart, but a vile, base, and ugly thing, so many filthy idols to be found there, like a swarm of the worst of vermin? Are you not as a cage full of unclean birds! What thought you of yourself on Monday night, Jan. 16, 1699? What unbelief saw you there, what baseness of every kind? And what day goes over you, but you see still something in you to humble you? And what were you that God has employed in this work? Those who were sometime your fellows are mean and despised; and will you for all this seek your own glory? Woe unto you if you do so.

7. Consider, That "Him that honours God, God will honour; but he who despises him, shall be lightly esteemed." Have respect, O my soul, with Moses, to the recompense of reward, and beware of preferring your own to the interest of Christ, lest you are classed among those who seek their own, and not the things of Christ.

8. Lastly, Consider what Christ has done for you. Forget not his goodness, his undeserved goodness to such a base wretch as you art. Remember him from the land of the Hermonites, and from Mizarhill; and let love to him predominate in you, and you shall then be helped to sacrifice all to his glory.

Thirdly, Christ had the good of souls in his eye. He came to seek and save what was lost; he came to seek the lost sheep of the house of Israel. So he sent out the apostle to open the eyes of the blind, to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God. Follow Christ in this, O my soul, that you may be a fisher of men. When you study your sermons, let the good of souls be before thee; when you preach, let this be your design, to endeavour to recover lost sheep, to get some brands plucked out of the burning; to get some converted, and brought in to your Master. Let that be much in your mind, and be concerned for that, whatever doctrine you preach. Consider, O my soul, for this effect,

1. What the design of the gospel is. What is it but this? This is the aim of it all; and if it be not the method also, it is very lamentable. It is the everlasting gospel that Christ has made manifest, declaring the will of God concerning the salvation of man.

2. Consider wherefore God did send you out. Was it to win a livelihood to yourself? Woe to them that count gain godliness; that will make the gospel merely subservient to their temporal wants. Rather would I perish for want than win bread that way. Well then, was it not to the effect you might labour to gain souls to Christ? Yea, it was. Have a care then that you are not like some who go to a place, being sent thither by their master, but forget their errand, when they come there, and trifle away their time in vanity and fooleries.

3. Consider the worth of souls. If you remember that, you can not but have an eye to their good. The soul is a precious thing: which appears if you consider, (1.) Its noble endowments, adorned with understanding, capable to know the highest object; will to choose the same; affections to pursue after it, to love God, hate sin, in a word, to glorify God here, and to enjoy him here and hereafter. (2.) It must live or die for ever. It shall either enjoy God through all the ages of eternity, or remain in endless torments for evermore. (3.) No worldly gain can counter-balance the loss of it. "What shall it profit a man, if he should gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" (4.) It cost Christ his precious blood ere it could be redeemed. It behoved him to bear the Father's wrath, that the elect should have borne through all eternity; and no less would redeem it. So that the redemption of the soul is indeed precious. (5.) Christ courts the soul. He stands at the door, and knocks, to get in. The devil courts it with his baits and allurements. And will you, O my soul, be unconcerned for the good of what is so much courted by Christ and the devil both? Be ashamed to stand as an unconcerned spectator, lest you show yourself none of the Bridegroom's friends.

4. Consider the hazard that souls are in. Oh! alas, the most part are going on in the high way to destruction, and that blind-folded.

Endeavour then to draw off the veil. They are as brands in the fire: will you then be so cruel as not to be concerned to pluck them out? If so, you shall burn with them, world without end, in the fire of God's vengeance, and the furnace of his wrath, that shall be seven times more hot for unconcerned preachers than others.

5. Consider what a sad case you yourself were in, when Christ concerned himself for your good. You were going on in the way to hell as blind as a mole; at last Christ opened your eyes, and let you see your hazard, by a preacher (worthy Mr. H. Erskine) that was none of the unconcerned Gallios, who spared neither his body, his credit, nor reputation, to gain you, and the like of you. And will you preach unconcerned for others? I should abhor myself as the vilest monster, in so doing. Lord, my soul rises at it when I think on it. My soul hates, and loathes that way of preaching: but without you, I can do nothing. Lord, rather strike me dumb, than suffer me to preach unconcerned for the good of souls; for if dumb, I should murder neither my own soul, nor those of others.

6. Consider that unconcernedness for the good of souls in preaching, argues, (1.) A dead lifeless heart, a loveless soul, with respect to Christ. If you have any life or love to Christ, dare you be unconcerned in this matter? Nay, sure, he who has life will move; and he who has love, will be concerned for the propagating of Christ's kingdom. (2.) Unbelief of the threatenings of God especially. For if you believe that the wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God, you can not preach to them as if you were telling a tale. If you believe that they must depart into everlasting fire, your heart will not be so frozen as to be unconcerned for them. The sight of it by faith will thaw your frozen heart. (3.) A stupid heart, and so a hateful frame. Who would not abhor a watchman that saw the enemy coming on, if he should bid them only in the general provide to resist their enemies, or should tell them that the enemy were coming on, so unconcernedly as they might see he cared not whether they should live or perish? And what a hateful stupidity is it in a preacher of the gospel to be unconcerned for souls, when they are in such hazard?

7. The devil shames such preachers. He goes about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour; and they, set to keep souls, creep about like a snail. He is in earnest when he tempts; but such are unconcerned whether people hear, or forbear to hear their invitations, reproofs, etc. Yea, how concerned are the devil's ministers that agent his business for him? They will compass sea and land to gain one proselyte. And shall the preachers of the gospel be unconcerned?

8. If it be so that you are unconcerned for the good of souls, it seems you earnest not in by the door, but have broken over the wall, and are but a thief and a robber, John 10:1, compared with verse 12, " He who is a hireling, sees the wolf coming, flees, and leaves the sheep, and the wolf catches them." Ver. 15, "The hireling flees, because he is a hireling, and cares not for the sheep." O my soul, if at any time you find your heart unconcerned then, not having the good of souls before you, remember this.

9. Lastly, you can not expect God's help, if you forget your errand. Have you not known and experienced, that these two, God's help in preaching, and a concernedness for the good of souls, have gone with you hand in hand? O my soul, then endeavour to be much in following of Christ this way, setting the good of souls before your eyes; and if you do so, you may be a fisher of men, though you know it not.

Fourthly, Christ had not only the good of souls before his eyes, but he was much affected with their case; it lay heavy on his spirit. There are these four things wherein this appeared, that occur to me, with which he was much affected.

1. He had compassion on the multitude, because they were as sheep without a shepherd, Matt. 9: 36. That the people lacked true pastors, was affecting to him; he had compassion on them. Follow Christ in this, O my soul; pity them that wander as sheep without a shepherd. And let this consideration move you, when you go to preach in planted congregations, where you will even see many that are wandering, though they have faithful pastors. Look on them as sheep not better for them than if they lacked a shepherd. But especially when you go to vacant congregations, pity them, commiserate their case, as sheep lacking a shepherd; which no doubt will be a notable means to make you improve well the little time allowed you for gathering them in. Be affected with their case; and, for this end, consider,

(i.) That such are in a perishing condition: Where no vision is, the people perish. They are ignorant, no wonder, they have none to instruct them; they have lean souls, no wonder, they have none to break the bread of life to them; they wander from God's way, they have none to watch over them, and so the devil takes his opportunity.

(2.) Consider that for the most part here at least [this was written while I preached in the presbytery of Stirling] people are deprived of watchmen, in regard of the malignancy and ticklishness of their superiors; so that though the people would ever so gladly receive one to break the bread of life to them, yet they cannot get their will, by reason of these keeping it from them. It would make your heart to relent if you saw a child that would be content to have a pedagogue to guide him, seeing he acknowledges he cannot do it himself, if notwithstanding his tutor should not allow him one, but stand in the way of it, and so the child be lost for want of a pedagogue. So, O my soul, commiserate you the case of those who would fain have one to watch over their souls, but yet they that should employ their authority, power, wit, etc., to find out one for them, either lie by or oppose the same.

(3.) Consider the many souls that go out of time into eternity, during the time that they want a shepherd. They have none to instruct them, none to let them see their hazard, none to comfort them when death comes, but they slip away, many of them at least, as the brutes that perish. You have found this to have been a cause of your commiserating such before now, when you have spoken to such being a dying. If this be well considered, and laid to heart, you can not but pity them on that very account, which will stir you up to employ the little time you have among them, so as they may be fitted for death.

2. Christ wept, because people in their day did not know, i.e., do, the things that belonged to their peace, Luke 19:41, 42. When he thought upon this their stupidity, it made the tears trinkle down his precious cheeks. O my soul, you have this ground of mourning, this day, wherever you go. Who are they that are concerned to do what is necessary to be done in order to their peace with God? Few or none are brought in to Christ. It is rare to hear now of a soul converted, but most part are sleeping on in their sins in this their day, like to sit the day of God's patience with them, till patience be turned into fury. Many heart-melting considerations to this purpose may be found. I shall only say this to sum up, that such a case is most deplorable, in the noontide of the day that people should venture on the feud of such a dreadful enemy as God is, and should sit as quiet even when the sword of vengeance is hanging by a hair over their heads, and notwithstanding that every day may be, for ought I know, their last day, every sermon the last that ever they shall hear, and that ere the next day these enemies shall be made to encounter with the terrible and dreadful Majesty, who shall go through them as thorns and briers, and burn them up together, by the fire of his wrath, world without end. O my soul, how can you think of this, and not be more affected with the case of people as they are now-a-days? Sure, if you could weep, here is ground enough for tears of blood.

3. He was grieved for the hardness of people's hearts, Mark 3:5. It was ground of grief to the Lord Jesus, that people were so hardened that no means used for their amendment would do them good. Follow Christ in this, O my soul; be grieved and affected with the hardness of the hearts of this generation. O what hardness of heart may you see in every corner whither you go, and where you preach, most part being as unconcerned as the very stones of the wall; and say what you will, either by setting before them alluring promises or dreadful threatenings, yet people are hardened against both, none relenting for what they have done, or concerned about it, though you would preach till your eyes leap out. O happy they whose time God has brought to a close, and taken to himself! Happy servants whom God has called out of the vineyard before the ground grow so hard that almost all labour was in vain! This is a time of mourning for the preachers of the gospel, for people are strangely hardened. Which is the more lamentable, O my soul, if you consider (1.) What God has done even for this generation. He has taken off from our necks the yoke of tyranny and arbitrary power, and has given deliverance from Prelatic bondage; and yet for all this the generation is hardened. (2.) If you consider how the Lord has been dealing with us by rods. For some time there was great dearth of fodder for beasts; yet that stirred us not up. Afterwards was death of cattle; yet we have not returned to the Lord. Then followed death of men, women, and children. He has sent blasting among our corns. This is now, I suppose, the fourth year of our dearth. And for all these things we remain hardened. O Lord, you have stricken them, but they have not grieved; you have consumed them, but they refuse to receive correction; they make their faces harder than a rock, they refuse to return. What shall be the end of such hardness as this? (3.) It is yet more lamentable, in regard the plague of hardness seems to be universal. It is not only the wicked, or openly profane, or those who have no religion, but the professors of religion that are hardened in part. Oh my soul, this is a day wherein Scotland's pillars are like to fail, a day wherein the hands of our Moseses are like to fall, and Amalek is like to prevail. Many professors desire to hear the causes of God's wrath searched into, but they are not mourning over them; and truly it is most lamentable, that those among us who as so many Joshuas should be discovering the Achans in our camp, that are the troublers of Israel, by a strange kind of dealing are very wary in meddling therewith, or to show them unto people. And it is much to be feared, that there are among us some accursed things that are not yet found out. O that God would put it in the hearts of Zion's watchmen to discover what these Achans are, and that preachers were obliged even by the church to speak more freely of the sins of the land. But, alas! O Lord, why have you hardened all of us from your fear? (4.) If you consider, that this hardness of heart is a token of sad things yet to come. Who has hardened himself against God, and prospered! Job 10:4. Alas! it is a sad prognostic of a further stroke, that seeing we will not be softened either by word or rod, therefore the Lord will thus do to us; and seeing he will do thus, we may prepare to meet the Lord coming in a way of more severe judgment against us. Sad it is already; many families are in a deplorable condition, and yet nothing bettered by the stroke; and what a sad face will this land have, if it be continued? Spare, O Lord, your inheritance, your covenanted people, and make us rather fall on such methods as may procure the removal of the stroke. These, and many other things, O my soul, may indeed make you grieved for the hardness of this generation.

Fifthly y Christ was much in prayer; and that, 1. Before he preached, as Luke 9: 18. Follow him in this, O my soul. You have much need to pray before you preach. Be busy with God in prayer, when you are thinking on dealing with the souls of men. Let your sermons be sermons of many prayers. Well doth prayer become every Christian, but much more a preacher of the gospel. Three things, said Luther, make a divine, testings, meditations, and prayer. Be stirred up, O my soul, to this necessary work; and for this end consider,

1. That you cannot otherwise say of your preaching, Thus says the Lord. How will you get a word from God, if you do not seek it; and how can you seek it but by earnest prayer? If otherwise, you may get something that is the product of your empty head to mumble over before the people, and spend a little time with them in the church. But O it is a miserable preaching where the preacher can say, Thus say I to you but no more; and cannot say, Thus saith the Lord.

2. Consider your own insufficiency and weakness, together with the weight of the work, Who is sufficient for these things? which if you do, you will not dare study without prayer, nor yet pray without study, when God allows you time for both. It is a weighty work to bring sinners in to Christ, to pluck the brands out of the fire. Have you not great need then to be serious with God before you preach?

3. Consider that word, Jer. 23:22. "But if they had stood in my counsel, and had caused my people to hear my words, then they should have turned them from their evil way." There is no doubt but preachers not standing in God's counsel this day, and not making men to hear God's words, is one great reason of the unsuccessfulness of the gospel. Now this way, to wit, prayer in faith, is the most proper expedient for acquaintance with the counsel of God. Neglect it not then. O my soul, but be much in the duty.

Lastly, Remember, that you have found much good of such a practice, and have found much of the Lord's help both in studying and preaching, by so doing. For which cause you allot the Sabbath morning entirely to that exercise, and meditation, if you can get it done. Wherefore let this be your work. And there are these things which you would specially mind to pray for with respect to this.

(1.) That you may have a word from the Lord to deliver unto them; that you may not preach to them the product of your own wisdom, and what merely flows from your reason; for this is poor heartless preaching.

(2.) That your soul may be affected with the case of the people to whom you preach. If that be wanting, it will be tongue preaching, but not heart-preaching.

(3.) That your heart may be inflamed with zeal for the glory of your Master; that out of love to God, and love to souls your preaching may flow.

(4.) That the Lord may preach it into your own heart, both when you study and deliver it. For if this be not, you shall be like one who feeds others, but starves himself for hunger; or like a way-mark, that shows the way to men, but never moves a foot itself.

(5.) That you may be helped to deliver it; and that (1.) With a suitable frame, your heart being affected with what you speak; (2.) Faithfully, keeping up nothing that the Lord gives thee; and (3.) Without confusion of mind, or fear of man.

(6.) That you may have bodily strength allowed for the work, that your indisposition disturb you not.

Lastly, That God would countenance you in the work with his presence and power in ordinances, to make the word spoken a convincing and converting word to them that are out of Christ; a healing word to the broken; confirming to the weak, doubting and staggering ones, etc.; that God himself would drive the fish into the net, when you spread it out. In a word, that you may be helped to approve yourself to God, as a workman that needs not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.

2. After preaching, Christ was taken up in this work, Mark 6:46, Matt. 14:23, And when he had sent the multitudes away, he went up into a mountain apart to pray. Follow Christ in this, O my soul. It is better to do this, than go away with the great people in the afternoon; which I shun as much as I can; and when at any time I do it, it is a kind of torment to me; which I have shunned, and do resolve to shun more; and if at any time I be necessitated to go, that I shall spend more time alone through grace. Pray to God, O my soul, that your labours be not unsuccessful; that what you have delivered, may not be as water spilt on the ground. Pray for pardon of your failings in public duties; and that God may accept of your mite which you give with a willing mind; that he would not withdraw his blessing because of your failings; but that he would be pleased to water with the dew of heaven the ground wherein you did sow the seed, that it may spring up in due time; that the word preached may be as a nail fastened by the Master of assemblies, so as the devil may not be able to draw it out. Think not, O my soul, that your work is over, and you have no more to do when the people are dismissed. No, no; it is not so. Think with yourself, that the devil was as busy as you were, when you were preaching; and that afterwards he is not idle. And shall he be working to undo your work, and you unconcerned to hold it together? O no, it must not be so; God will not be pleased with this. And alas! I have been too slack in this point before this: Lord, help me to amend. If a man had a servant that would go out and sow his seed very diligently and faithfully; but would come in, and sit down idle when it is sown, and forget to harrow it, and hide it with the earth; would the master be well pleased with him? yea, would he not be highly displeased, because the fowls would come and pick it up? So, O my soul, if you should be never so much concerned to get good seed, and never so faithful and diligent in sowing it; yet if after you turn careless, and take not the way to cover it, by serious seeking to the Lord, that he may keep it in the hearts of people, and make it to prosper, the devil may pick it all up; and where is your labour then; and how will the Lord be pleased with you! Therefore pray more frequently, cry more fervently to God, when the public work is over, than you have done; and endeavour to be as much concerned when it is over, as when you were going to it. I do not doubt, but many times, when you preach, some get checks and convictions of guilt; some perhaps are strengthened; but both impressions wear off very soon. I fear you must confess, and take with a sinful hand in this, in that you do not enough labour to get the seed covered when it is sown, and the nail driven farther in when it is entered. Though many times your body is wearied after the public work, yet sure you may do more than you do; and if your soul were more deeply affected, the weariness of body would not be so much in your mind; but you would trample on it, that you might get good done by your work, and souls might not always thus be robbed by that greedy vulture and roaring lion, the enemy of your own salvation, and the salvation of others. Although he has been as busy to do harm all the day to souls as you have been to do good, yet he will not complain of weariness at night. Take courage then, O my soul, and be strong in the Lord; and do not give it over to this enemy; endeavour to hold him at the staffs end. You have a good second; Christ is concerned for his own seed as well as you. Go on then, and be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might, and let that ravenous fowl never get a grain away as long as you can get it kept from him. Thus then, O my soul, follow Christ, in being taken up in this so necessary an exercise. Thy Lord and Master had no wants to get made up, there was no fear of his failing in this work of the gospel; yet he prayed, to give all, and especially preachers of his word, an example. Lay not aside the pattern then, but write after his copy even in this.

Sixthly, Christ contemned the world. He slighted it as not meet for any of his followers. He became poor, that we might become rich, Matt. 8:20. He gave himself entirely, at least after his inauguration, to matters that concerned the calling he had to the work of the gospel, John 9:4. All, especially preachers, are to follow Christ in the contempt of the world. Yet we must beware of imitating him in those things which we are not commanded to follow, as voluntary poverty, this being a part of his satisfaction for the sins of the elect. Neither doth this exempt the preachers of the gospel from a lawful provision of things necessary for themselves, or others they are concerned in; for the apostle tells us, that he is worse than an infidel, who doth not provide for his family, 1 Tim. 5:8, where church-men are not excepted. Yea, it is clear that the ministers of the gospel may sometimes work with their hands for their maintenance, either when the iniquity of the times wherein they live does not allow them what may be for their maintenance, or when the taking of it will hinder the propagation of the gospel, as is clear by the practice of the apostle Paul. So that that in which, with respect to this, you are to follow Christ, O my soul, is, that you do not needlessly involve yourself in worldly matters, to the hindrance of the duties of your calling and station. As you are a preacher of the gospel, other things must cede and give place to that. This is what our Lord teaches us, Matt. 8:22, Follow me; and let the dead bury their dead: and the apostle, 2 Tim. 2:4, No man that wars entangles himself with the affairs of this life. Which was a thing not observed by some, especially our bishops, who acted as magistrates, as well as ministers; a thing which our Lord absolutely refused; Who made me a judge or a ruler? says he; yet digested by them, being an infallible sign of their ignorance of the weight of that work. And in my opinion it is not observed either by some ministers now-a-days, who when they have their glebes and stipends sufficient for their maintenance, do notwithstanding take more land a-farming. For my part, I see not how such can be said not to entangle themselves with the affairs of this life, and go beyond what doth become them as ministers of the gospel. Neither of these are my temptation now, being a probationer. But seeing I am unsettled, a corrupt heart and a subtle devil may take advantage of me, if I be not wary, and by their arguments from my present state may cast me off my feet, if I take not heed. Therefore, O my soul, Beware of preaching smoothly upon the account of getting a call from any parish. Have a care, that the want of that, viz., a call, do not put you upon men-pleasing. No, no; that must not be your business. Remember, God provides for you even now liberally, as he sees fit. You do not want even so much of the world as is very necessary; and he who has provided for you hitherto, yea, took you, and kept you from the womb, will not forsake you as long as you do not forsake him, but remains faithful. Remember, God has set the bounds of your habitation, and determined the time. Though men and devils should oppose it, they shall not be able to hinder it. It is God himself that sets the solitary in families; and why should you go out of God's way to procure such a thing to yourself, or to antedate the time which is appointed of God; Go on in faithfulness, fear not; God can make, yea will make a man's enemies to be his friends, when his ways please the Lord. And though their corruptions disapprove of your doctrine, and yourself for it, yet their consciences may be made to approve it, and God may bind them up, that they shall not appear against you. And what though you should never be settled in any charge at all? Christ and his apostles were itinerants. If the Lord see it fit, why should you be against it? If the Lord have something to do with you in diverse corners of his vineyard, calling you sometimes to one place, sometimes to another, you are not to quarrel that. Perhaps you may do more good that way than otherwise. If you had been settled at home, then some souls here, which perhaps have got good of your preaching, would have been deprived of it at least as from thee; and God will always give you meat as long as he gives you work; and go where you wilt, you can not go out of your Father's ground. Further, if you should take that way, and transgress for a piece of bread, you may come short of your expectation for all that, and lose both the world and a good conscience. But suppose you should by that means gain a call and a good stipend, you lose a good conscience, which is a continual feast. For how can such a practice be excused from simony? and it is a certain symptom that a preacher seeks not them, but theirs;

and so you get it, and the curse of God with it. No; Lord, in your strength, I resolve never to buy ease and wealth at such a dear rate.

2. Beware that you close with no call upon the account of stipend. Lay that by when you consider the matter. See what clearness you can get from the Lord, when any call may be given you, and walk according to his mind, and the mind of the church. Woe is me if a stipend should be what should engage me to a place. I would shew myself a wretched creature. Consider matters then abstracting from that. For surely,

(1.) This is direct simony; selling the gift of God for money. Let their money perish with themselves that will adventure to do so. Such are buyers and sellers, that God will put out of his temple. Such are mere hirelings, working for wages; and too much of Balaam's temper is to be found there.

(2.) That will provoke God to curse your blessings, and to send a moth among what you may get; and it surely will provoke God to send leanness to your soul, as he did with the Israelites in the wilderness, when he gave them what they were seeking.

(3.) You can not expect God's blessing on your labours, but rather that you should be a plague to a people whom you so join with. In a word, you would go in the wrong way, and be discountenanced of God, when you have under- taken the charge.

There is yet a third case wherein this contempt or slighting of the world should appear in one sent to preach the gospel; that is, when a man is settled, and has encouragement or stipend coming in to him, and so must needs have worldly business done, especially if he be not single, whereby he is involved in more trouble thereabouts, than any in my circumstances for the time are. In such a case a minister would endeavour to meddle as little as he can with these things, but shun them as much as lies in him, especially if he have any to whom he can well trust the management of his affairs. For surely the making of bargains or pursuing them are not the fit object of a minister's employment. Not that I mean simply a man may not do that, and yet be a fisher of men; but that many times the man that takes such trouble in the things of the world to catch them, indisposes himself for the art of man-fishing. But this not being my case, I pass it, referring any rules in this case how to walk till the Lord be pleased so to trust me, if ever. Only do you, O my soul, follow Christ in the contempt of the world. Do not regard it. You may use it as a staff in your hand, but not as a burden on your back, otherwise the care of souls will not be much in your heart. And to help you to this contempt of the world, consider,

(1.) The vanity of the world. Solomon knew well what it was to have abundance, yet he calls all 'vanity of vanities', all is but vanity. The world is a very empty thing, it cannot comfort the soul under distress. No; the body it can do no good to when sore diseases do afflict it. The world cannot profit a man in the day of wrath. When God arises to plead with a person, his riches avail nothing. When he lies down on a death-bed, they can give him no comfort, though all his coffers were full. When he stands before the tribunal of God, they profit him nothing. Why then should such an useless and vain thing be esteemed?

(2.) Consider that the love of the world where it predominates, is a sign of want of love to God: If any man love the world the love of the Father is not in him. Yea, even in a gracious soul, in so far as the love of the world sways the heart, in so far doth the love of God decay. They are as the scales of the balance, as the one goes up, the other goes down.

(3.) Consider the uncertainty of worldly things. They are as a bird that takes the wings of the morning, and flees away. Set not your heart then on what is not. How many and various changes as to the outward state are in a man's life! Men sometimes vile are exalted, honourable men are depressed; and the world is indeed unstable; that part which is now up, shall ere long be down. Do you not see that there is no constancy to be observed in the world, save a constant inconstancy! All things go on in a constant course of vicissitude. Nebuchadnezzar in one hour is walking with an uplifted heart in his palace, saying, Is not this great Babylon that I have built, etc.? and the next driven from men, and made to eat grass as an ox. Herod in great pomp makes an oration, the people cry out, "It is the voice of a God, and not of a man" and he is immediately eaten up of worms. The rich man today fares sumptuously on earth, and tomorrow cannot get a drop of water to cool his tongue.

(4.) Consider the danger that people are in by worldly things, when they have more than daily bread. The rich man in Luke xii. felt this to be a stumbling-block on which he broke his neck. The young man in the gospel, for love of what he had of the world, parted with Christ, heaven, and glory, and so made a sad exchange. Prosperity in the world is a dangerous thing; it is what destroys fools; Prov. 6:32. When Jeshurun waxed fat, he kicked against God, and forgot the Lord that fed him, Deut. 32:15. It was better for David when he was on the one side of the hill, and his enemies on the other, and so in great danger, than when he was walking at ease on his house-top, when he espied Bathsheba. And of this, O my soul, you have had the experience. Our Lord tells us, that it is very hard for a rich man to be saved; and teaches us that it is hard to have riches and not set the heart on them. What care and toil do men take to themselves to get them! what anxiety are they exercised with, and how do they torment themselves to keep them! and when they are got and kept, all is not opera pretium to them. Many by riches and honour, etc., have lost their bodies, and more have lost their souls. It exposes men to be the object of others, as Naboth was even for his vineyard; and who can stand before envy? Prov. 27:4. See 1 Tim. 6:9, 10. This ruined Naboth, 1 Kings 21. So that he who handles the world, can very hardly come away with clean fingers. It is a snake in the bosom, that, if God prevent it not by his grace, may sting your soul to death.

5. Remember the shortness and the uncertainty of your time. You are a tenant at will, and know not how soon you may remove; and you can carry nothing with you. Therefore having food and raiment (which the Lord does not let you want), be therewith content, 1 Tim. 6:7, 8. You are a stranger in this earth, going home to your Father's house, where there will be no need of such things as the world affords. Why should you then, O my soul, desire any more than will carry you to your journey's end? Are you going to set up your tent on this side Jordan to dwell here? Are you saying, It is good for me to be here? Are you so well entertained abroad, that you desire not to go home? No, no. Well then, O my soul, gird up the loins of your mind! You are making homeward, and your Father bids you run and make haste: go then, and take no burden on your back; lest it make you halt by the way, and the doors be shut ere you reach home, and so you lie without through the long night of eternity.

And to shut up all, remember that there are other things for you to set your affections on than the things of this world. There are things above that merit your affections. Where is Christ, heaven and glory, when you look upon the world, highly esteeming it? See you no beauty in it to ravish your heart? Surely the more you see in him, the less you will see in the world. And has not experience confirmed this to thee? Alas, when the beauty of the upper house is in my offer, that ever I should have any kindness for the world, that vile dwarf and monster, that shall at the last be seen by me all in a fire. O my soul! you look too low. Behold the King in his glory; look to him that died for you, to save you from this present evil world. See him sitting at the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in heaven. Behold the crown in his hand to give you, when you have overcome the world. Behold the recompense of reward bought to you with his precious blood, if you overcome. Ah! are you looking after toys, and going off your way to gather the stones of the brook, when you are running for a crown of gold, yea more than the finest gold? Does this become a man in his right wits? Yea, does it not rather argue madness, and a more than brutish stupidity? The brutes look down, but men are to look up. They have a soul capable of higher things than what the world affords: therefore,

Be then of a more noble spirit than the earth-worms. Let the swine feed on husks. Be you of a more sublime spirit: trample on those things that are below. Are you clothed with the sun? get the moon under your feet then; despise it, look not on it with love, turn from it, and pass away. Let it not move you if you are poor, Christ had not where to lay his head. Let not the prospect of future troublesome times make you solicitous how to be carried through; for "you shall not be ashamed in the evil days, and in the days of famine you shall be satisfied." God has said it, Ps. 36:19, therefore do you believe it. Be not anxious about your provision for old age, for by all appearance you will never see it. It is more than probable you will be sooner at your journey's end. The body is weak; it is even stepping down to salute corruption as its mother, ere it has well entered the hall of the world: your tabernacle pins seem to be drawing out by little and little already. Courage then, O my soul; ere long the devil, and the world, and the flesh shall be bruised under your feet; and you shall be received into eternal mansions. But though the Lord should lengthen out your days to old age, he who brought you into life will not forsake you then either. If he give you life, he will give you meat. Keep a loose hold of the world then; contemn it if you would be a fisher of men.

Seventhly, Christ was useful to souls in his private converse, taking occasion to instruct, rebuke, etc., from such things as offered. Thus he dealt with this woman of Samaria; he took occasion from the water she was drawing, to tell her of the living water, etc. Thus being at a feast, he rebuked the Pharisees that chose the uppermost seats, and instructed them in the right way of behaviour at feasts. O my soul, follow Christ in this. Be edifying in your private converse. When you are at any time in company, let something that smells of heaven drop from your lips. Where any are faulty, reprove them as prudently as you canst; where they appear ignorant, instruct them when need requires, etc. And learn that heavenly chemistry of extracting some spiritual thing out of earthly things. To this purpose and for this end endeavour after a heavenly frame, which will, as is storied of the philosopher's stone, turn every metal into gold. When the soul is heavenly, it will even scrape jewels out of a dunghill; whatever the dis- course be, it will afford some useful thing or another. Alas! my soul, that you do follow this example so little. O what a shame is it for you to sit down in company, and rise again, and part with them, and never a word of Christ to be heard where you are? Be ashamed of this, and remember what Christ says, Matt. 10:32, 33, "Whoever shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father — but whoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven." How many times have you been somewhat exact in your conversation when alone; but when in company, by the neglect of this duty, especially of rebuking, you have come away with loss and a troubled mind, because of your faint-heartedness this way. Amend in this, and make your converse more edifying, and take courage to reprove, exhort, etc. You know not what a seasonable admonition may do; the Lord may be pleased to back it with life and power.

Eighthly; Christ laid hold upon opportunities of public preaching when they offered, as is clear from the whole history of the gospel. He gave a pattern to ministers to be instant in season and out of season. O my soul, follow Christ in this; refuse not any occasion of preaching when God calls you to it. It is very unlike Christ's practice for preachers of the gospel to be lazy, and slight the opportunities of doing good to a people, when the Lord puts opportunities in their hand. For this end consider,

1. Besides Christ's example, that you are worth nothing in the world, in so far as you are lazy. Why do we serve, if we are not serviceable for God?
2. It may provoke God to take away your talent and give it to another, if you are not active. Whatever talent the Lord has given you, it must be employed in his service. He gave it to you not to hide it in a napkin. Remember what became of the unprofitable servant that hid his Lord's money.
3. You know not when your Master shall come. And blessed is that servant whom, when his Lord shall come, he shall find so doing. If Christ should come and find you idle, when he is calling you to work, how will you be able to look him in the face? They are well that die at Christ's work.

END OF THE SOLILOQUY.
